

New attorney: He and law firm a good fit

BY KYLE J. MACARTHUR

Register Editor

Daniel Lundquist proudly declares he's looking forward to finally moving to Blue Earth once his home in Mankato sells.

Raised on a family farm in the west central Minnesota town of Wheaton, Lundquist somewhat marvels at the size of Blue Earth, quickly recognizing the desire of residents to keep the community thriving.

"This is a big town to me," says Lundquist, who started in May as a new attorney at Frundt and Johnson. "I wish we were here, because Blue Earth has been great."

An attorney for slightly less than two years, Lundquist previously worked for the Mankato law firm of Maschka, Riedy and Ries. He soon realized a desire to branch out and practice several types of law, rather than specializing in civil litigation.

"I want to work in a community where I can build my own practice," he says. "You don't always get that opportunity if you specialize."

When Lundquist answered the advertisement for an opening at Frundt and Johnson and first opened the front door to the firm last spring, the husband and father of one immediately recognized the good fit.

"When I was in my second year at law school, this is the

Staff photo by Kyle J. MacArthur

Daniel L. Lundquist is a new attorney at law for the Frundt and Johnson law firm in Blue Earth.

work I wanted to do," says the William-Mitchell College of Law graduate, who plans to spend the next few years building a base of clients.

"My wife and I want to put down roots and stay here forever. I would like to retire here."